Message from the President

Striving for success without hard work is like trying to harvest where you haven't planted.

- David Bly

Dear Students,

At the very outset I wish you and all your family members a very Happy and Prosperous New Year, a new year filled with immense opportunities and infinite possibilities. The beginning of a New Year brings with it the age old tradition of New Year resolutions. While on a lighter side, these are those promises that we make in haste or in full conviction but are not able to live up to for more than a few days. For many they are those missions that never kick off; and yet each year, without fail, we resolve to reform, be it our physical, emotional or intellectual selves. As students these resolutions are sometimes as simple as adding an extra hour to our study or bring regularity and as complex as cracking an entire Examination.

And since you might be wondering as to what makes me hit the bull's eye, let me tell you that we all have sailed through the same boats at some point of time. But then, all that aside, what is expected of you as fine professionals in making is not just to resolve to grow more and groom yourselves a bit more, but to mould yourself in a value system which is befitting of the roles that you are about to take up as Company Secretaries, as Governance Professionals.

The strength portrayed by you in the recently held December, 2020 session of Examinations to me is par exemplary. Having pursued your passion against all odds makes you a professional then and there, irrespective of the result and success achieved.

Friends, this being my last address to you, it is quite passable to have a lot to share even after having done so in the past one year through these pages till date. Although you might have time at your hands before you become a full fledged CS but to me, each one of you is a brand ambassador of the Institute, right in this very moment.

As a student, your conduct represents the Institute, your behaviour demarcates the image of the professionals and your morality becomes the reflection of this profession. All in all you are no less than a full fledged member when it comes to representing this Organization in the society.

Having said that, it would be rhetoric to put out loud the expectations of this Institute and that of my own self from each one of you. And even though I may be stepping down from the Chair of the President, I assure you that I will always have your best interests at heart in all my future roles in this Institute.

My best wishes to all of you for the year ahead and your professional journey as well.

Keep Learning, Keep Growing!!!

EXPLORING FACTORS OF PRODUCTION

Introduction

The factors of production are the resources utilized for producing a good or service and plays a pivotal role in economic development of a nation. The factors of production are- Land, Labour, Capital and Entrepreneurship. It is to be noted that land, labour and capital as factors of production were initially recognized by the early political economists like, Adam Smith, David Ricardo and Karl Marx. In current scenario capital and labour are considered as two vital factors of production for undertaking production activities leading to creation of profits.

When factors are utilized they earn a reward called factor income. Factor incomes are rent, wages, interest and profit. Factors are substitutable and it affects the factor incomes also accordingly. The more a factor can be substituted the less it can exploit its relative scarcity.

Facets of Factors of Production

In this section, the three aspects of factors of production has been covered, i.e. Fixed and Variable, divisible and indivisible and theory of factor pricing.

1. Fixed and Variable Factors of Production: In economic analysis factors of production occupies the center stage. It has a strong relevance in theory of production wherein various combinations of factors of production assist in producing output when a firm operates under increasing or decreasing costs in the short-run, and when returns to scale increase or decrease in the long-run.

The theory of cost of production also relies upon the combinations of factors employed in business and the remuneration or prices paid to them. From the perspective of the theory of cost of production, factors of production are categorized into fixed and variable factors. Fixed factors are those whose cost does not change with the variation in output, like machinery, plant etc.

On the contrary, variable factors are those whose quantities and costs vary with the change in output, i.e. to produce large quantities of output, substantial quantities of labour, raw materials, power etc. may be required.

2. Divisible and Indivisible: Factors of production are also classified into divisible and indivisible. Factors are considered divisible when it can be adjusted to the output. For instance, labourers is considered to be divisible as its quantity may be enhanced or reduced depending upon the output of a firm, thereby resulting into economies of scale.

* Dr. Akinchan Buddhodev Sinha, Deputy Director, The ICSI.

Views expressed in the Article are the sole expression of the Author and may not express the views of the Institute.

Indivisible factors are those which are available in minimum quantities, and are lumpy, like plant, machinery, furniture, fixture , entrepreneur etc. They also provide economies of scale, but at a rapid pace. It is to be noted that when a firm expand its operations, the returns to scale enhance since indivisible factors are employed to their maximum capacity.

3. Theory of factor pricing: The concept of factor of production provide deep insights into theory of factor pricing. For this purpose, factors of production are classified into specific and non-specific. A factor of production which is specific in use earns a higher reward than a non-specific factor. This also solves the issue of distribution of income to various resource owners.

Glimpse of Factors of Production

Land – raw materials

- Oil
- Coal
- Fish
- Agricultural produce – fruit, vegetables, meat
- Commercial real estate – land to build factories

Labour (human resources)

- Workers – full time, part-time, temporary, permanent
- Management

Capital (man-made resources)

- Machines
- Tractors, spades
- Computers, Phone
- Office block
- Factory, Assembly line
- Public infrastructure – communication and roads needed to transport goods across the country.

Entrepreneurs (individuals who bring factors of production together

- Self-employed
- People who start up businesses – Anita Roddick, Bill Gates, Richard Branson
- Finance – Entrepreneurs needs access to money – either savings or loans from banks to get started.

Potential Factors of Production

Apart from mentioned factors of production, it would be interesting to note the following potential factors of production-

- (i) Knowledge- Human Capital: The skills and aptitude of work force. For instance, a doctor who spent almost 15 years studying medicine is more productive than non-skilled or semi-skilled workers.
- (ii) State of technology: Some economists consider the state of technological development as a factor of production, as it influence the efficacy of capital investment.
- (iii) Social capital: It refers to unity of society, i.e. trust and legal framework which assist gives an entrepreneur the trust and confidence to set up a business organization.
- (iv) Cultural heritage: If in an economy there have been a tradition of embracing new business approaches / models, then replacing the obsolete business models becomes convenient, thereby enhancing the efficiency of operations, sustainability and profitability of a business organization.

Real life examples of Combination of Factors of Production

1. Tea Industry

- a) Entrepreneur acquires land to grow tea plants. In this industry land is an important factor as it needs to have the appropriate climate and soil to grow the tea.
- b) The company then need to employ workers to look after tea and at harvest time pick the tea leaves.
- c) The entrepreneur (farmer) will also need to invest in some capital – farming tools, baskets and vehicle to deliver the crop to the market.

It is to be noted that this is a relatively labour intensive industry and so labour cost constitute a substantial portion of the total cost.

2. Processed Food Industry

- a) The entrepreneur will need land for a factory.
- b) They will need to invest significantly in sufficient capital – machines and tools to mix the raw ingredients into the finished food product. For mass production, they will need to build a large factory to benefit from economies of scale.
- c) With a large factory, the firm will then need to employ skilled labour to work and operate the machinery.
- d) The industry is relatively complex and will require a degree of specialization – with workers concentrating on a range of tasks from technological innovation to marketing and design.

It is to be noted that processed food industry is relatively capital intensive and thus costs associated with the usage of capital tends to be on the higher side.

3. New Tech industries

In new high tech industries such as software development, the most significant factor is human capital, i.e. the experience, education and skills of the workers. There is scope for the individual or small team to set up a business to focus on a small aspect of developing new software. This industry may not need any land – the entrepreneur could work from home or an internet cafe.

Conclusion

Factors of production are indispensable elements in the production of goods and services. Proper allocation or combination of factors of production is essential to attain efficiency in production, thereby resulting into cost minimization and profit maximization. In this era of cut throat competition where a business thrives on the pricing of its products, it becomes imperative to sell the products at a price which is economical for the customers so that the business organization on the one hand is able to increase its turnover and profits and on the other hand capture substantial market share.
